

Digital Media Communications (DMC.CT)

A minimum cumulative 2.00 grade point average (GPA) overall is required for graduation.

Certificate

Arts and Communication

Given the changing dynamics of communication in this digital age, this certificate program will introduce students to the new theories surrounding digital persuasion. It offers students instruction in communication, advertising, and the creation of digital images. The program offers professional and technical experiences in persuasion, graphic design, digital imaging, and business concepts to prepare students for careers in digital communication.

Organizations across all realms depend on online visibility and targeted client interactions. New positions requiring focused skills in digital communication are being created within private and public sector organizations. This certificate will offer students experience in these critical aptitudes and is intended for individuals who desire entry-level employment in the field of digital communication and persuasion.
